FIXED INCOME

Does Duration Extension Enhance Long-Term Expected Returns?

September 1, 1996

In the past, investors have been rewarded for extending the duration of their fixed income holdings when the yield curve is upward sloping, but have not been rewarded (or have even been punished) when the curve is inverted. Thus, curve steepness is a decent bond market timing signal — and an even better country-selection signal.

However, yield curve shape reflects both a required term premium and the market’s expectations of future rate changes. The latter part creates a wedge between the term premium and curve steepness. A very steep (or inverted) curve may reflect abnormally low (or high) short rates and the market’s expectation that rates will return to normal. For this reason, I also study the survey-based term premium. We simply subtract from the latter a consensus forecast of future rate changes.

The survey-based premium was as high as 3% to 4% during the inflationary 1980s but fell to near zero in the 2000s, where it remains. That is, even when the Treasury yield curve was at record steepness in the past year, the shape could be fully accounted for by the market expecting short rate increases from zero to more normal levels in a few years’ time. There was no additional term premium built into market pricing, which suggested that Treasuries offered pretty poor value.

As always, one could combine the information in curve steepness with other indicators to forecast rewards for duration extension. The most promising predictors include indicators related to economic growth, inflation and bond-market momentum.

AQR Capital Management, LLC ("AQR") provide links to third-party websites only as a convenience, and the inclusion of such links does not imply any endorsement, approval, investigation, verification or monitoring by us of any content or information contained within or accessible from the linked sites. If you choose to visit the linked sites, you do so at your own risk, and you will be subject to such sites’ terms of use and privacy policies, over which AQR.com has no control. In no event will AQR be responsible for any information or content within the linked sites or your use of the linked sites.

The information contained herein is only as current as of the date indicated, and may be superseded by subsequent market events or for other reasons. The views and opinions expressed herein are those of the author and do not necessarily reflect the views of AQR Capital Management, LLC, its affiliates or its employees. This information is not intended to, and does not relate specifically to any investment strategy or product that AQR offers. It is being provided merely to provide a framework to assist in the implementation of an investor’s own analysis and an investor’s own view on the topic discussed herein. Past performance is not a guarantee of future results.

Hypothetical performance results have many inherent limitations, some of which, but not all, are described herein. The hypothetical performance shown was derived from the retroactive application of a model developed with the benefit of hindsight. Hypothetical performance results are presented for illustrative purposes only.

Diversification does not eliminate the risk of experiencing investment loss.

Certain publications may have been written prior to the author being an employee of AQR.
This material is intended for informational purposes only and should not be construed as legal or tax advice, nor is it intended to replace the advice of a qualified attorney or tax advisor.

AQR Capital Management is a global investment management firm, which may or may not apply similar investment techniques or methods of analysis as described herein. The views expressed here are those of the authors and not necessarily those of AQR.